

Harold Wilsons EEC Application: Inside the Foreign Office 1964-7

Britain's policy towards Europe in the latter half of the twentieth century has been the subject of endless interest, scrutiny, and debate. This book seeks to further our knowledge of one of the most crucial periods for both Britain and Europe but also to enliven the debate concerning fundamental issues. Central to this study is the decision by 1960s Labour Prime Minister, Harold Wilson, to replicate the path taken by his Conservative predecessor Harold Macmillan, in applying to join the European Economic Community. Using newly released archival material in the National Archives and having consulted extensive interviews with many of the key political figures, Jane Toomey not only challenges old assumptions but also offers a new interpretation of Wilson's European diplomacy.
