Forannan and Colman. Their names do not occur in this calendar, but they are to be found in the tract mentioned under Samat, at the 3rd of May, p. 118 supra. Sec ODonorans note on Moling in the Four Masters, An. 696, vol. i., p. 298. (R.) Colum, Priest, of Enach. Colwlan, son of Cathbhadh, of Midhe-iseal. Aighlenn, daughter of Leiun, was his mother. The Sons Of Ernln, of Inis-mac-n-Ernin, in Loch C6, in Connacht. 23. G. NONO KAL. OCTOBRIS. 23. Adamnan, son of Ronan, of the race of Conall Gulban, son of Niall, as to his stock. His mother was of the race of Enna, son of NiaLL Ronat was her name. This is the Adamnan who was six and twenty years in the abbacy of I-Coluim-CiUe. On a certain day that he was at Hi, he meditated in his mind to remain for three days and three nights in his church alone praying to the Lord, and he remained to the end of that time without coming to the monastery at all. They sent some mature men to the church to know how the cleric was, for they thought he was too long absent from them. They looked through the key-hole, and they saw a little boy with brilliance and bright radiance in the bosom of Adamnan. And Adamnan was thanking and caressing the infant; and they were not able to look at him any longer by reason of the divine rays which were around the boy. They were certain that it was Jesus who was in the shape of an infant, delighting Adamnan in this manner, and also that he was his satisfaction and gratification during these three days and nights.⁴ He was a vessel of wisdom, and a man full of the grace of God, and ...
