

Information Concerning Political Assessments and Partisan Activity of Federal Office Holders and Employees (Classic Reprint)

Persons who by the provisions of these rules are in the competitive classified service, while retaining the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns. 2. Definition of political activity and scope of rule. Activity in politics includes any activity pertaining to or connected with a party or parties controlling or seeking to control Government in the Nation, or in a State, county, or municipality. Any one of two or more bodies of people contending for antagonistic or rival governmental policies or measures is a political party. The fact that a campaign may not mean affiliation with any of the great national political parties or that the party may be a reform party is not material, for the reason that one of the primary purposes of the rule forbidding political activity on the part of competitive classified employees is to require them, in their political as well as their official actions, to avoid any act or display of partisanship on any pending political issue which might cause public scandal or unfavorable comment and offend persons who have relations with them in their official capacity. For an employee of the Government who is the paid servant of all citizens of all political faiths, publicly to display his partisanship with respect to any pending issue is detrimental to the service; an employee could not, of course, be permitted to support such an issue and another employee forbidden to oppose it, and his partisanship, while pleasing to some, would be offensive to others. It is well known that reform or so-called nonpartisan campaigns are frequently more bitterly contested than campaigns conducted on strictly partisan lines, and however meritorious may be the reform sought to be attained, if the question is a political one a(Typographical errors above are due to
