

Political Problems: Essays on Questions of the Day (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Political Problems: Essays on Questions of the Day There obtains in the minds of a large and increasing number of people, a conviction that we fall far short of living by the full light of modern knowledge and experience; that the masses of the people do not receive an equitable share of the fruits of their labor, and do not enjoy an adequate measure of benefit from the cumulated results of human labor, study, research and invention; that in a land of abundant wealth and production there should not be such want, such privation and such necessity for unremitting toil; that somehow and somewhere there must be grave errors in our system of society, in our commercial life or in our government, much waste and loss and injustice, to cause the wide difference in condition between the many who toil through life for a bare living, and the few who are possessed with abundant wealth.
