

The Federation of the World (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Federation of the World
In publishing this third edition, now eight years after the appearance of the first, I have not deemed it wise to make any material changes in what was then written. The nature of the argument, as an interpretation of the forces and movements then clearly seeming to me to be rapidly working out the federation and peace of the world, is such that it could not well be made more forcible by recasting it into another form. The recent extraordinary progress of the nations, in spite of the persistence of the rivalry of armaments, toward the ideal attainment then forecast is made all the more striking by presenting it, as is done in the last two chapters, alongside the prediction at that time written down.
