Not illustrated. 1835 Excerpt: ...asked whether he would submit to the judgment of the commissioners? re RESISTS THE DISPENSING POWER. 227 solutely answered that he would, so far as the same was not contrary to the laws of England and the statutes of the college. Sir Robert Wright observing that the King had dispensed with their statutes, Dr. Hough said, that though it was not his business to settle the bounds of the royal prerogatives, still he was convinced that the fellows, bound by oath to the observance of the college statutes, could neither be absolved from the same, or receive any others. The next day being summoned again, and asked, whether he was ready to acquiesce in the judgment given by the ecclesiastical commissioners, declaring his election null and void? he replied, that never having been summoned before them, either in person or by his attorney, he looked upon their sentence as null; and offered to try his title in Westminster Hall. Being asked if he was ready to give up the keys of the presidents lodgings to the person whom the King had thought fit to nominate? he replied, that as no one else could be president while he was alive, he could neither part with the statute book, or the keys committed to his charge. So that, finding him deaf to all their propositions, they sentenced him to be removed for ever from the presidentship. The fellows were then asked, whether they would be present at the inauguration of the Bishop of Oxford? They all, with the exception of Mr. Charnock, refused; upon which the doors of the presidents lodgings were forced open, and the bishop put in possession. The fellows being again asked, whether 228 TWENTY-SIX FELLOWS
