

The Nations at War: The Birth of a New Era (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Nations at War: The Birth of a New Era
A Hundred years ago, the last general European war effected the overthrow of a militarydespotism. Great expectations were then formed of the dawn of a new era; they came to nothing, owing to the blunders or crimes of the victors. To-day a similar conflict is occurring, similar hopes are aroused. Many confidently predict that such hopes will be once more falsified; they despair of the future of the race, and give full rein to their pessimism. But that pessimism is unjustified. In the last century, mankind has made some progress; the democracy in every land has learned something of its power. That power can be used for good, and will be so used, if the many do not despair of themselves. The allies can be forced to remain true to the high ideals which they have professed; their victory may be the dawn of a brighter era. Unless mankind has lived in vain, that dawn is certain.About the PublisherForgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
